AMERICAN COMMERCIAL	§
LINES, LLC	§

OPINION AND ORDER

During a Hearing before this Court on March 1, 2013, the Court denied the Motion to Stay of Defendant, American Commercial Lines, LLC, without prejudice to being reurged, without refiling, in the event the Fifth Circuit agreed to hear an interlocutory appeal in Coffin v. Blessey Marine Services, a similar FLSA action. On March 18, 2013, the Fifth Circuit agreed to hear the agreed interlocutory appeal in Coffin. In a letter to the Court, dated March 21, 2013, counsel for Defendant reurged the Motion. Because this Court has denied Motions to Stay in other similar cases, it will not require a response from Plaintiffs.

The two most significant criteria to be considered in assessing the propriety of granting a stay pending an appeal are whether the movant has made a showing of likelihood of appellate success on the merits and whether the movant has made a showing of irreparable injury if the stay is not granted. The Court will address each of these requirements in turn.

LIKELIHOOD OF SUCCESS ON THE MERITS

In its appeal, Blessey Marine asks the Court of Appeals to find that loading and unloading duties performed by a vessel tankerman are seaman's work. In the opinion of this Court, it is not likely that Blessey will succeed on the merits. Judge Atlas ruled against Blessey based upon her extension of the Fifth Circuit's opinion in Owens v. SeaRiver Maritime, Inc., 272 F.3d 698 (5th Cir. 2001), to vessel tankermen and this Court believes Judge Atlas was correct in doing so. Owens held that a land-based tankerman's loading and unloading duties are not seaman's work. This Court does not believe that holding is likely to be reversed simply because a tankerman performs those same duties aboard a vessel. Indeed, the Secretary of Labor, as the named Plaintiff in McLaughlin v. King Welding, Inc., 1988 WL 81539 (C.D. Cal.), took the same position as the instant Plaintiffs based upon the application of the Department of Labor's own regulations. See 29 C.F.R. §§ 783.33 and 783.37. Those regulations instruct a District Court to examine the character of the work being performed, not where it is performed, and to determine whether the non-seaman's work being performed by the Plaintiff is substantial, that is, whether it occupies more than 20 percent of the time worked by Plaintiff during the work week. Since the "findings of the Department of Labor are entitled to great deference," Dole v. Petroleum Treathers, Inc., 876 F.2d 518, 521 (5th Cir. 1989), it is most likely that this case, and others like it, will need to be resolved by determining whether "as a general matter, a substantial portion of (the vessel tankerman's) time was taken up by non-seaman's work, Owens, 272 F.3d at 703, n.5, not by whether he is otherwise a member of the barge's crew.

IRREPARABLE INJURY

The “injury” the Defendant wishes to avoid is the legal expense of discovery while the Fifth Circuit considers the interlocutory appeal in Coffin. But “(m)ere injuries, however, substantial, in terms of money, time and energy necessarily expended . . . are not enough” to constitute irreparable injury. Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Commission v. National Football League, 634 F.2d 1197, 1202 (9th Cir. 1980) (quoting Sampson v. Murray, 415 U.S. 61, 90 (1974)). Moreover, a substantial amount of the expenses incurred in discovery may be recoverable as “costs” should the Defendant prevail.

For the foregoing reasons, it is ORDERED that the “Motion to Stay Action” (Instrument no. 49) of Defendant, American Commercial Lines, LLC, is DENIED.

DONE at Galveston, Texas, this 12th day of April, 2013.
